

GEORGES ROCOURT

Georges Rocourt is a senior professor at Franklin University Switzerland, where he also serves as Chairman of the International Management Department. Professor Rocourt's reputation as a "Renaissance man" is legendary among Franklin and Forum-Nexus students, for his extensive expertise in European history, politics, economics, and culture. He carried out his undergraduate studies at Northwestern University and his graduate studies at Johns Hopkins University. He has been a senior professor for Forum-Nexus for the last 23 years, teaching a variety of courses on the European Union, focusing on European business, politics, culture, and society. In addition to his academic endeavors, Professor Rocourt is a highly regarded geopolitical consultant to European companies and financial institutions.

Before moving to Switzerland he was a professor in the U.S. at Barry University, Towson University, and Loyola University Maryland. He also served as Chief Economist of a major U.S. financial institution (Mercantile-Safe Deposit & Trust in Baltimore). Professor Rocourt has extensive international experience and speaks German, French, Italian, and Spanish. He is an avid reader and his favorite authors include the Greek historian Thucydides, the English political philosopher Thomas Hobbes, and Edward Gibbon, the English historian who chronicled the decline and fall of the Roman Empire.
